I am Nici, a new SAGovt employee, who is in her late 30's and the mother of 6 children between the ages of 11 and 15. As a family we struggle internally with the usual round of 'why can't we use MSN whenever we want?...why can't I have a laptop of my OWN in my room? and why do we need to ask you before going on the internet?', which are issues each family has to deal with. We try to make use of the information at hand in order to formulate our own family community

'policies' about such things. Everyone makes their own choices and it's great we all don't have the same view. My comment here regarding discussions which should be happening at home, is around educating parents (who may or may not be net savvy) to the joys and potential pitfalls of the internet and the scale of decisions which need to be made about the internet at home. What it means to have a facebook page, what you can and can't change about your FB profile to make elements public or private (as one example), that there are fantastic opportunities to connect, re-connect and learn from social media and following 'tweets'. Parents need tools and real life examples and how to's in order to form opinions about their own internal 'policies' about social media and it's use. On the work front...I have just attended a forum in Adelaide set up by the Office of the Chief Information Officer (SAGovt) in regards opening up our ideas and work practices to embrace social networking tools....my impressions from the forum are, that as a collective, the participants were all in violent agreement that Government and it's agencies need to and should embrace (web2.0) technology and begin to form a view about how we could utilise and benefit from the social media space. Education about what it is to make 'smart' decisions about personal facebook pages and tweets is vital and appropriate and perhaps (dare I say) in favour of making a 'policy' for something which moves and morphs at the speed of sound. I await with interest the ensuing chapters of this debate.

How can we strengthen our democracy and promote efficiency and effectiveness by making government more transparent, participatory, and collaborative?

June 26, 2009

The Open Government Dialogue is now closed. Because of your participation, this dialogue has generated a rich collection of ideas that will shape the President's commitment to making our government more transparent, participatory, and collaborative.

This dialogue represented the first of a three-phase process that is soliciting public input in crafting recommendations on open government. Summaries of the brainstorming that has occurred here, and of subsequent phases in the process, can be found on the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy Blog.

Visit the White House Open Government Initiative website for more information.

The National Academy of Public Administration

On January 21st, the President issued the Memorandum on Transparency and Open Government, calling for an unprecedented level of openness in government. In the memorandum, the President outlined three principles for promoting a transparent and open government: transparency, participation, and collaboration. Now, the President is calling on you to help shape how that commitment is fulfilled. This online brainstorming session, open from May 21st to 28th, 2009, will enable the White House to hear your most important ideas relating to open government.

This platform allows you to submit ideas, discuss and refine others' ideas, and vote the best ones to the top. We are seeking innovative approaches to policy, specific project suggestions, government-wide or agency-specific instructions, and any relevant examples and stories relating to law, policy, technology, culture, or practice. The National Academy of Public Administration, a Congressionally chartered, non-profit, non-partisan institution, is hosting this brainstorming session on behalf of the White House.

The most important themes and ideas to emerge will provide the basis for two more stages of interaction: A Discussion Phase, when we will deepen the conversation about compelling topics raised during the brainstorming, and a Drafting Phase, when we will ask you to use a wiki to draft language for recommendations collaboratively.

Search Ideas

After searching, scroll down for results.

Getting Started

Here is a discussion question to get you started:

What strategies might be employed to adopt greater use of Web 2.0 in agencies?

While you're here:

- Search for Ideas to make sure that your idea or area of interest hasn't already been covered.
- Vote, Vote, Vote! Your votes are critical to ensuring that the best ideas "bubble up" to the top.
- Add Your Idea by clicking on the "New Idea" button to the left.
- Spread the Word! E-mail a link to this website to your network, and invite them to get involved.

Welcome to My Estonia webpage!

Let's Do It! My Estonia brainstorming session on the 1st of May brought together more than 11 000 Estonians, who were thinking together how to improve their neighborhood and entire Estonia. Results of the brainstorming session have now been entered to the Ideabank, which we expect you to read, comment and contribute to the realization of the ideas.

Experts will give their assessment to the ideas. Analysis team binds ideas to families to connect these groups, which have similar ideas. This summer we are organizing workshops for the leaders who were thinking on similar topics to have the possibility of even greater ideas to appear. My Estonia team will try to help the leaders of the projects by providing information about financing, mentors and so on.

If you would like to use the brainstorming format for generating new ideas or solving problems, supportive materials can be found on My Estonia web page. The results can continually be entered to the Ideabank for others to comment and contribute.

My Estonia team wishes a lot of power and energy for the ideas to be realized!
